WARNER BROTHERS TELEVISION NETWORK SELECTS KTECH'S IRD (INTEGRATED RECEIVER DECODER) FOR ALL OF ITS TV STATIONS

KTech selected as the IRD supplier

Chatsworth, CA – November 15, 2002 – Warner Brothers Television Network has selected KTech's Integrated Receiver Decoder (IRD) for all of their stations. The part number of the unit is DVM-100, and it is also described as the 8-VSB Professional Reference Receiver. After an evaluation period, KTech's equipment was chosen for its versatility, price point, and functionality.

The equipment has been one of the best seller for KTech Telecom and it has a wide industry acceptance. It is known in the industry as the 'Swiss Army Knife,' of the professional digital receivers since the unit accepts wide range of inputs and puts out a variety of useful outputs. Yet, KTech Telecom is continuing to improve the unit by adding additional features according to the product development department.

The product has also been featured in the TV Technology's equipment review back in 2001. The article can be found on the link: <http://www.ktechtelecom.com/DVM-100%20Equipment%20Review.pdf>

KTech's 8-VSB Professional Reference Receiver is useful in DTV monitoring and testing and the DVM-100 is an 8-VSB professional Receiver that accepts RF Ch2-Ch69 input, DVB-SPI input/output, DVB-ASI input/output, SMPTE-310M input/output and produces outputs in RGBHV video, VGA video and Y PB Pr, Analog L & R audio and Dolby Digital AC-3 audio. Video modes include: 1080i, 720p, 480p, 480i, NTSC Composite (BNC SDI), PSIP Display and EPG.

About Warner Brothers Television Network

The Warner Brothers Television Network is part of Turner Broadcasting System, Inc., which comprises virtually all of AOL/Time Warner's broadcast properties. It is available in 88 percent of the country and airs primetime programming Sunday through Fridays. Its kids' line-up airs weekday afternoons and Saturday mornings.

The WB Network launched on January 11, 1995 and is the fastest-growing network among young adults.
